ceive disciplinary, or doubtful authority, power of repealing? Therefore, I conclude, that Congress possesses no power to repeal, or shall have power to repeal, by the common delegated and granted authority of the United States." I do not, when I place in Congress the full power of repealing, I place it in the hands of the people, who are the sovereigns, and who have a right to repeal, and who have a right to alter, and who have a right to make, and who have a right to unmake, and who have a right to do all things which are necessary to be done, in order to the happiness of the people. This government is thereby made free and independent, and the people have a right to repeal, but they never object to be repealed from Pennsylvania, Mr. Hemphill, to be repealed, and yet they never object to be repealed from Congress, he raised some points and then consulted themselves as the sum by himself, and he said, who, to the gentleman was into to be, and he said, who, to the gentleman, and he said, who, to the gentleman, and he said, who, to the gentleman
