(Continued from Page 1.)

Situation? If he could, he would be a traitor to his country, and ought to be punished as such. I know no other ground to stand on. I know of no other principle to act upon, or no other or nothing, (I mean no disrespect to the Senate, and sincerely believe them to be honest, and patriotic,) but the Constitution.

There is one other remark of the general tenor of the speech, which I must plead with candor. I, like every other citizen, have a right to hear every publicated speech, or paper, that concerns the public, or that I have any pecuniary or other interest in knowing. I have read the speech of Mr. Jefferson, and the speech of Mr. Adams, and have perused the speech of Mr. Hamilton, and the speech of Mr. Ames, and have read and heard many other speeches, and papers, on the subject of the Navy, and Army, and all, or most of them, have been addressed to the people, or published for the public information, and the tenor of them, or most of them, is, to show the necessity of a Navy, and Army, and to show the necessity of a war with France, and to show the necessity of a war with Great Britain, and to show the necessity of a war with both, or with one, or with neither, which we know have been addressed to the people, or published for the public information, and the tenor of them, or most of them, is,