NEW-YORK June 6th.

Previous to the departure of the Kennebeck from Trinidad, an express had arrived from London with orders to put that place in a state of complete defence.

By the attention of a respectable commercial friend we have received a Cape Francois paper of 22d Floreal, (May 21) from which we give the following translations—merely omitting the praises bestowed on particular corps and individuals who distinguished themselves.

ARMY OF ST. DOMINGO.

Order of the day of 3d Floreal.

The brigands have been again in the north: they directed their force against Fort Dauphin; but two powerful attacks have only added to their defeats, and to the glory of our brave soldiers.

On the 13th Germinal (April) assisted by secret intelligence from within, they presented themselves to the number of 1400. Aided by some traitors, a large party of them was introduced into the very heart of the place, while the main body, en masse, thundered and pressed upon all sides. The critical moment served but to redouble the energy of the garrison. The promptness and vigour of the able dispositions of General Quantin, and the bravery of the grenadiers of the 110th demi brigade, have rendered ineffectual their plots and their efforts. After an obstinate engagement of two hours, they were driven from the town and its environs, leaving above 50 dead, and bearing away a considerable number of wounded. The traitors within have been discovered and confined.

On the 18th of the same month, the brigands, organized in regular military form, and with generals at their head, made on Fort Dauphin, another attempt. Their attack commenced at 5 in the morning; at 7 they were defeated on all points in complete route; above 40 dead, a great number of whom were officers. have been found round the place, and the rebels were busily employed during great part of the engagement in carrying off their wounded.

Le Port de Paix has been also attacked on the 22d Germinal (April) in the afternoon. The enemy unmasked of a sudden a great number of the batteries, which played upon the Forts Laveau & Pageot. At the approach of night the affair became more general and more serious, and at 11 o'clock an assault was made on all the forts. The brigands were provided with large and long ladders of 20 steps. The extreme superiority of their numbers rendered it impossible to prevent their applying some of them: and by these means they succeeded in scaling the grand fort, and established themselves for some time at the foot of the block-house; but they were driven from thence after having lost a great many men. The forts Lavaux and Pageot were so well protected by the fire of the artillery from the grand and little forts and the stationary Corvette, that the enemy could not avail themselves on those two points of the scaling ladders they had brought.

The brigands have left 57 dead about our posts, many others they carried off; the number of their wounded must have been very considerable: we had but one man killed and two wounded.

General Fressinet, informed that the brigands had re-assembled in their neighbouring positions on the plain of Cul de Sac, with a design of making an incursion, gave orders to prevent by attacking them. In consequence, gen. Lavellette having prepared a column composed of detachments from the 5th light troops, the 89th of the line, and 30 national dragoons from Port-au Prince, arrived at 5 in the morning in presence of the brigands. He successively attacked and carried three strong positions where the enemy were entrenched. The result of this operation is a standard taken, above 30 of the brigands lie upon the spot, and the remainder of their hordes entirely dispersed: we had 12 wounded.

Port-au Prince, le 12 Floreal (May.)

I have the honor to inform you, gen. that the first consul, feeling the greatest solicitude for the army of St. Domingo, and desirous of terminating this fatal war without loss of time, not content with the daily reinforcements we receive, sends at this moment from the ports of France an army of 20,000 men, to which shall succeed another of the same force as early as necessary, should not the brigands be, as is expected, totally annihilated by the first army.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Extract of a letter from Port-de France, Isle of Martinique, dated 11th Floreal, written by an aid-de-camp of Admiral Villaret Joyeuse, captain-general of Martinique, to commandant Touffard.

Le Papillon has this instant arrived, bringing accounts of the continuation of peace in Europe, and departs this night to bear the information to your island.

We have been at work here for some days, to put ourselves in a state of defence; but it is happy for our colony, and still more for yours, that this measure becomes necessary.

Captain Gould, who arrived at Wilmington on the 15th inst. in 14 days from Gaudaloupe, informs—that serious disturbances have taken place amongst the white inhabitants of that town—that the general second in command, and several gentlemen of distinction have been apprehended by order of General Le Crois, and sent to France in a national ship of 74 guns, to be tried for conspiracy.

NewYork, June 3.

Capt. Patterson, of the schr. Jefferson from Cape-Francois, informs us that no reinforcements had arrived there lately; neither has any engagement of consequence taken place. The French have erected a number of block houses, and repaired the fortifications at the Cape, so as to be in a condition to hold out against any attack from the brigands. A few days before Capt. P. sailed, Capt. Touffard, with a scouting party of about 230, had a skirmish with the brigands, in which the latter lost a number of horses & had several men taken prisoners; the French had 13 men killed. This affair took place within 7 miles to the leeward of the Cape. Markets dull.

From a Bermuda Gazette of the 21st instant, received at the office.

Bermuda, May 21.

"By a vessel just from the Caicos, we have certain accounts from Cape-Francois, that all the French troops have evacuated that town and gone to Port-au-Prince, where a large detachment of troops in transports had lately arrived from France. The negroes were within one mile of the town when the evacuation took place. They have a method of communication with the different tribes by means of fires and making smoke on the hills, either for victory or defeat, &c. as well as all round the coast of the Island.

Fredericksburg, June 2.

Extract of a letter from John Mercer, Esq. to his brother in this town, dated Havre-de-Grace, April 19, 1803.

"I have been highly gratified to-day and yesterday, with the attention paid to Col. Monroe—These have been of the most marked and particular kind. Although I cannot understand their language, I can hear their cannon and see their military parade. We had not been in the Hotel an hour before a guard of fifty soldiers were placed at the door, with orders to obey the directions of the American minister. The general of the troops stationed here, then made his appearance at the head of thirty officers, most richly dressed; and after expressing their satisfaction at col. Monroe's safe arrival, and wishing him a pleasant journey to Paris, retired. The Americans who are here, have, likewise visited him. Merit will at last surmount calumny and detraction. Should these movements have received their impulse from Paris, which we cannot determine, it may be a happy presage to the important business upon which Colonel Monroe has come."

That this notice be published in the Washington Federalist and National Intelligencer three times before the said 15th of June instant.
