Abstract: Collection of ethnographic field recordings, photographs, and manuscripts documenting Tai Lüe religious rituals; oral narrative traditions; popular songs; poetry; performances for tourists; interviews with poets and singers; and some local audio and video recordings collected in Sipsongpanna (Xishuangbanna), Yunnan Province, China, by anthropologist Sara L. M. Davis from 1997 to 2005 for her dissertation, published as Song and Silence: Ethnic Revival on China's Southwest Borders, Columbia University Press, 2005. The collection includes some materials documenting Tai people and traditions in Burma.

Scope and Content

This ethnographic collection is based on the original field work that anthropologist Sara L. M. Davis conducted in Sipsongpanna (Xishuangbanna in Chinese), Yunnan Province, China, and in Kengtung, Shang State, Burma [Myanmar], between 1997 and 2003. The multi-format materials in this collection document Tai Lüe religious rituals, epic oral narratives, popular songs and performances for tourists, as well as interviews with oral poets and popular singers. They consist of her field notes, audio and video recordings, graphic images in the form of photographs and slides, and books published in Yunnan. This research formed the basis of Davis's book, Song and Silence: Ethnic Revival on China's Southwest Borders (Columbia University Press, 2005). Davis originally traveled to China's southwest borders to conduct doctoral research on ethnic minority folklore, focusing primarily on oral narrative poetry, known as Tai Lüe changkhap or skilled chants. (As used by Davis, changkhap may refer to the genre or to the performers or singers of changkhap.) She was based in the subtropical area of Sipsongpanna in the southwestern region of China, bordering Burma and Laos. Davis lived in Jinghong, the capital of this region, from 1997 to 1998 and made subsequent visits to the area through 2003.

The political challenges of being in a border region of China were immediately evident, and Davis found that many people were initially reluctant to speak openly with her. Instead, she encountered government-sanctioned performances that were marketed primarily to tourists and did not reflect the traditions she had come to document. Davis's field notes offer considerable detail about her experiences staying in monasteries, attending local festivals, and making connections with people in the area. Her search for oral storytellers revealed a growing underground ethnic revival movement. The efforts of young Tai Lüe monks and activists were helping to fuel a resurgence of Tai Lüe Buddhism and an increasing interest in their language and cultural traditions.

The manuscript portion of the collection includes photocopies of Davis's field notes from September 1997 through July 1998; photo, audio, and video logs; song texts in Tai Lüe with some transcriptions into English; articles by Ai No; concert posters (1998); a 2001 calendar, and Davis's book, Song and Silence: Ethnic Revival on China's Southwest Borders (Columbia University Press, 2005). In addition, 47 volumes of publications (1980-2004) were donated with the collection. There are a total of 1,166 graphic images, including 981 3"x5" color photographs, 184 35-mm color slides, and 1 black-and-white photograph, primarily of temples, festivals and ceremonies, and local scenery. Sara Davis took 397 of the color photographs between 1997 and 2001. Wilson Wong took 583 photographs and all 184 of the slides, showing the seventeenth-century temple, Wat Pan Gaew, and the eighth-century temple, Wat Gang, both of which are in Meng Lian. The images are exterior and interior views of the temple, including murals, architectural details, and the living quarters of the monks.

The sound recordings consist of 68 audiocassette tapes, 2 microcassettes, and 2 CDs. They document Tai Lüe religious rituals, epic oral narratives, popular songs, local festivals, and performances for tourists, as well as conference proceedings and interviews with oral poets and popular singers. The majority of the materials are in Tai Lüe, although some are in Chinese and some are in English. Thirty-one of these are Davis's field recordings, two are field recordings by other people, thirty-four are commercially produced, and seven of them are from what is known as the "grey market," tapes that had been previously recorded and were purchased at local markets, but they were not necessarily professionally produced. These recordings include those that were purchased at a stall in the Meng Hun Sunday morning market; those that were purchased at the Tai New Year festivities; and Tai language popular music from Burma, mostly 1970s era; and changkhap, which Davis bought in a Gasa shop in the town center. Many of the commercially produced materials were published by the Yunnan Music Video Publishing House and produced by the literary arts bureau of the TV station; some were produced by the Chinese government, and a number are recordings of Tai Lüe music that were given to Davis by Tai Lüe people in Yunnan.

The moving images are comprised of 12 videocassettes of various sizes and 9 VCDs ["Video Compact Disks" containing moving pictures and sound]. The majority of the videocassettes are Davis's recordings of religious rituals, festivals, and a tourist dance show. There are 8 commercial recordings, and 2 tapes of Davis being interviewed by the staff of the American Folklife Center in 2005. The artifacts in the collection are a bamboo flute with metal reed, woven Tai Lüe cloth, and a bundle of handmade wax candles.

The original notes and headings used by Sara Davis have been transcribed in the finding aid. Researchers should be aware that this finding aid uses both of the English transliteration forms for the region in which Davis conducted her research - Sipsongpanna, the Tai Lüe transliteration into English; and Xishuangbanna, the Chinese transliteration into English. The Library of Congress authority heading is Xishuangbanna, but Davis uses both forms of the transliteration in her field notes and on her folder headings. In her published book, Song and Silence: Ethnic Revival on China's Southwest Borders, she made the editorial decision to use the Tai Lüe transliteration, Sipsongpanna.

Similarly, Tai and Dai, both forms of the English transliteration of the Chinese cultural group, are used in this collection and finding aid. Tai is the Tai language transliteration into English and Dai is the Chinese transliteration into English. The Lü language, the Library of Congress authority heading for the language represented in this collection, is also known as the Lüe language and the Tai Lü language. Davis uses Tai Lüe for both the language and the people.

Biographical History

Sara M. L. Davis earned her Ph.D. at the University of Pennsylvania in East Asian Studies and in Folklore and Folklife. She conducted field research in Xishuangbanna, China in 1997-1998, and has returned several times since then. She has been affiliated with Yale University and University of California, Los Angeles, where she was a visiting scholar, and she was formerly a researcher for Human Rights Watch on China. Davis has contributed to publications including Far Eastern Economic Review, the Wall Street Journal, International Herald Tribune, and Modern China. She is currently the executive director of Asia Catalyst and lives in New York City.

Arrangement

The collection has been arranged by format into the following series: Manuscripts, Graphic Images, Sound Recordings, Moving Images, and Artifacts. Davis kept a detailed log of her photographs, sound and video recordings, and her original order has been preserved, although unique AFC ID numbers have been assigned to individual items. She assigned numbers to the photographs she herself took according to a system of "P" followed by a Roman numeral. This numbering system has been used to label each folder of photographs, but individual prints have been labeled using AFC ID numbers (PH0001, PH0002, etc.). Davis also used her own system to label sound recordings, using "AU," followed by sequential letters of the alphabet, and numbers to indicate multiple items within a given series (for example, AU-M1, AU-M2, etc. are a series of narrative legends that were purchased from the television station in Yunnan). While this order has been preserved, AFC has assigned ID numbers, SR01, SR02, etc. Davis used "V" followed by a number to organize moving images; and AFC has retained the numbers but used the preface "MV."

Access

Listening and viewing access to the collection is unrestricted. Physical access to the collection is available at the Folklife Reading Room of the American Folklife Center. Restrictions may apply concerning the use, duplication, or publication of items in this collection. Consult a reference librarian in the Folklife Reading Room for specific information about this collection.

Duplication of the collection materials may be governed by copyright and other restrictions. Acquisition Sara L. M. Davis donated this collection to the American Folklife Center on February 28, 2006. The collection was initially processed by Sarah Bradley Leighton in the spring of 2006, continued by Judy Ng and Charlotte Cushman in November 2007. The finding aid begun in 2006 has been completed and encoded in 2008 by Nora Yeh.
