A Night Bombardment

By Lieutenant Henri Farré
Observateur-Bombardier au Premier Groupe d'Escadrille de Bombardment

Only one who had taken part in a night bombardment from the air could have caught the spirit of the scene as Lieutenant Farré has done. Nothing spreads such terror as a night bombardment—the terror being out of all proportion to the casualties inflicted. Given another few weeks and the Allies would have sown this terror broadcast in Germany. The machines and fliers and the bombs were finally ready—and Germany knew it, too.
