The six-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Beale McLean has been carefully guarded during the greater part of his young life by a corps of detectives and nurses. He has slept in a $50,000 gold crib, the gift of the Belgian King Leopold; his playthings for a single Christmas cost $40,000. Yet, because he didn't want a son of his to be a "snob," the child's father three years ago took a little negro boy into his household to be young Vinson's playmate.
