

THE FIRST RUSSIAN WAR CARTOONS TO BE PUBLISHED IN NEW YORK.

(Printed Exclusively in The Tribune.)

"FAMINE IN GERMANY," is the Russian caption. The master is saying to the dog: "There once was a time when you ate with a smile; but now, little one, you must starve for a while."

"THE TOW-PATH." The Russian, with an ear hold on German and Austrian, is saying: "I hope again you'll never roam. you've got a country, why not stay there?"

"THE BOLD COSSACK." "From soldier to duke, the fierce German, horde won't forget the rebuke of the Cossack's sharp sword."

"THE UNLUCKY STROLL." "Francis Joseph went out walking, William said, 'now follow me;' the Czar of Russia heard them talking; the plight they're in you well can see."

"A CONVERSATION NEAR TSARGRAD." Russian, to Turk: "Your plight will continue to grow ever worse; you were never much good in a fight."
