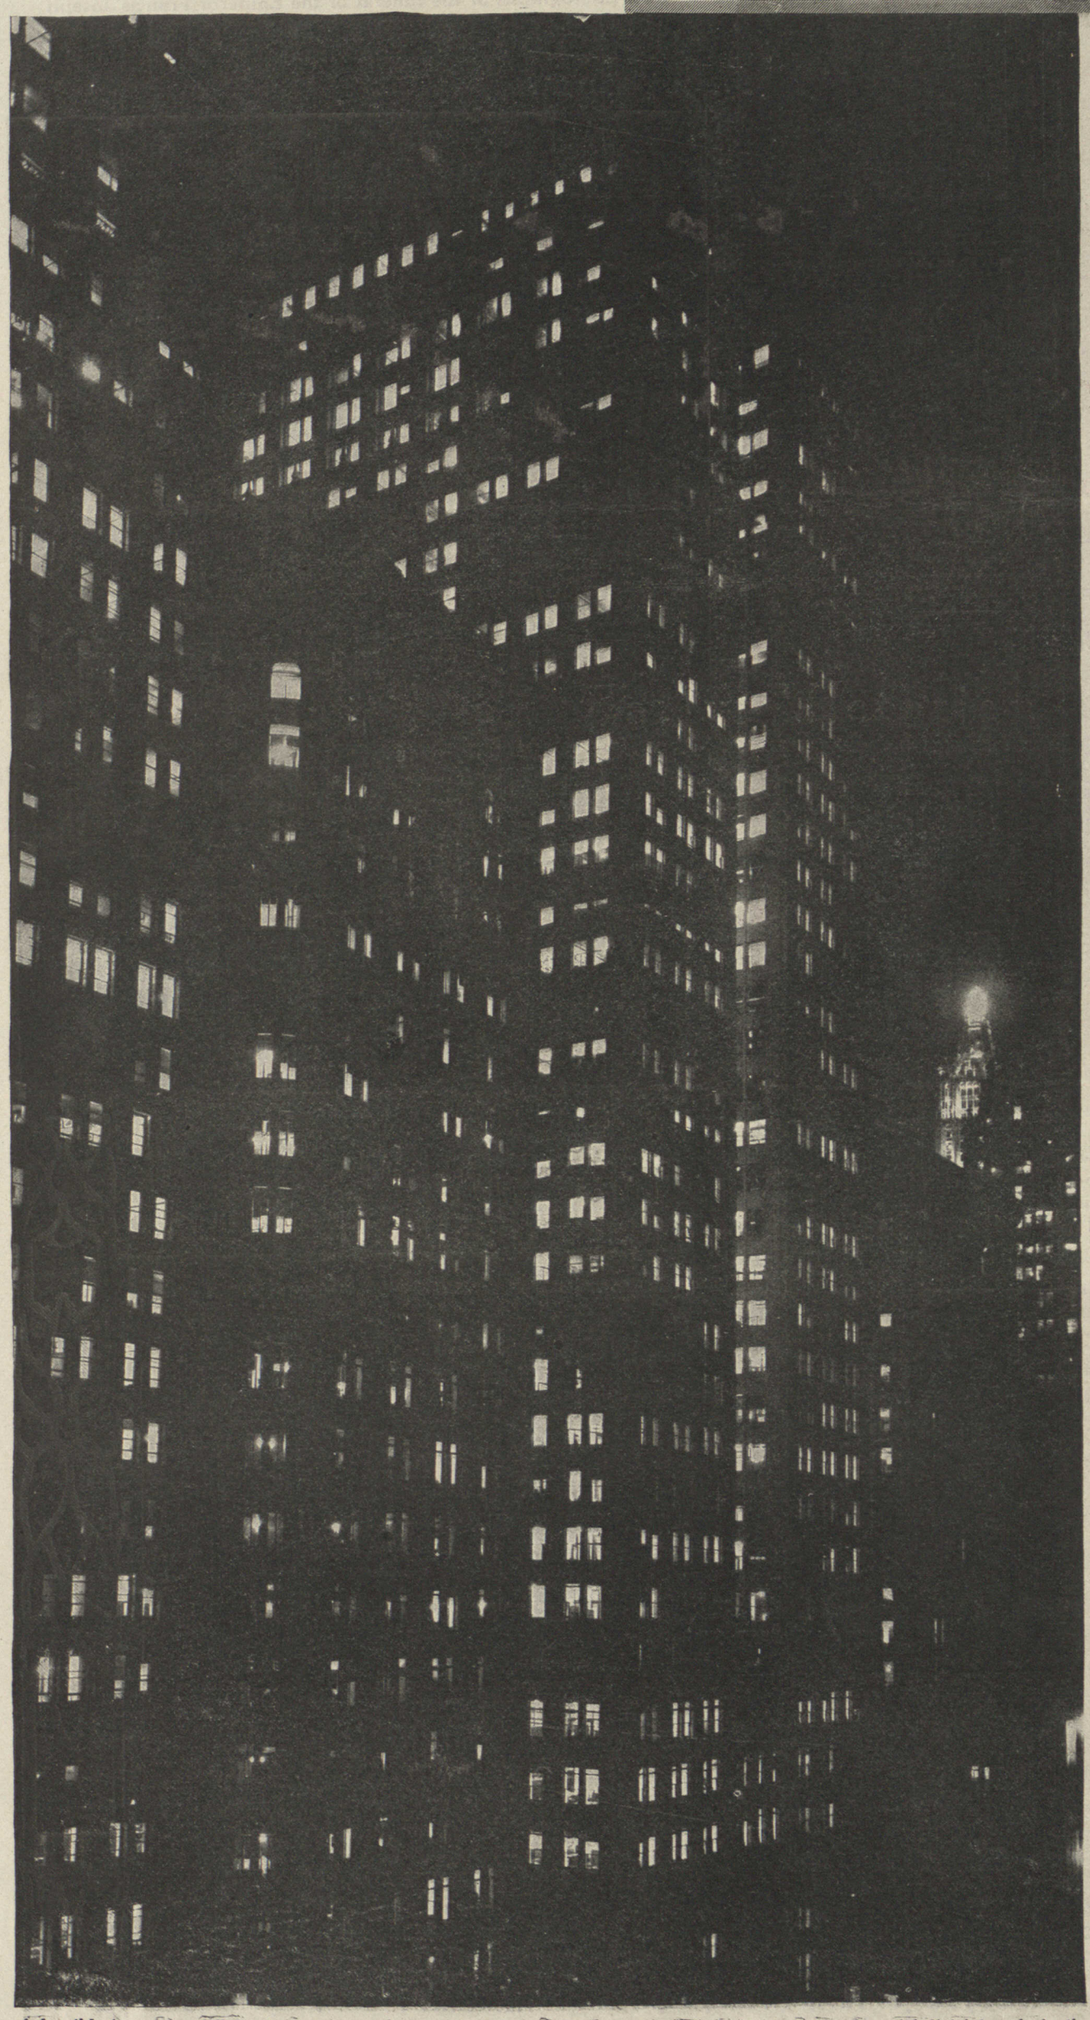
"Ours", an Early Victorian Play, Is This Year's Yale Show. Photos by White

Blanche Haye (W. Marshall, 1902) finds Angus McAlister (A. C. Crunden, 1918) and Hugh Calcot (S. W. Burke, 1917) in a hut in the Crimea preparing a meal under the supervision of Sergeant Jones (W. Van Bermuth, 1917).

Mr. Marshall is the heroine of "Ours," to be played by the Yale Dramatic Association at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday next.

Blanche is secretly in love with McAlister, the gentleman soldier with all the whiskers. The other beautiful young lady is Mary Netley, played by John Andrews, class of 1920.



A bewildering vista of lighted skyscrapers bursts upon the view of office building tenants in the financial district early in the evenings of these short days. From a window of The Tribune's financial office, 15 Broad Street, the camera's eye catches, beginning at the left, a shining corner of the Bankers Trust Building, the Hanover National Bank Building, the Equitable, the Liberty Tower and the tip of the Woolworth Building.

For its annual Tournament of Roses, on New Year's Day, Pasadena, Cal., has grown two acres of flowers. One hundred thousand dozen blooms will be required for the festival. Here are two pretty pickers.

Three hundred employes of the Bankers Trust Company and their friends made merry at a Christmas dance in the company's banking rooms. Three orchestras played continuously on as many floors and there was a tree with presents for all.
