

The rifle is replaced by a machine, and the targets are a quarter-mile away. This is the way the newly enlisted seamen of the U. S. S. Kansas are being taught marksmanship at an American Navy Yard. Photo © Underwood & Underwood.

Above, the U. S. S. Pennsylvania delivering a forward turret salvo, wherein the three 14-inch guns from the same turret are fired simultaneously. Photo © Underwood & Underwood.

THE COUNTESS OF CLANBRASIL, painted by Van Dyck, and now in the possession of Henry C. Frick. It is one of six Van Dycks recently obtained from the Earl of Denbigh and brought to America. Photo Lewis & Simmon.

Below, a British National Service girl proving that it is totally unnecessary to open a gate if it is less than five feet high. The National Service gives practical training in farm work to English girls. Photo © International Film Service.

To the left an Armenian service over kindred massacred by the Turks. The Christian rite is observed before the shrouded bodies are buried in a common grave. Photo F. E. Daniels.

For thirty months the Boches were held this close to Soissons; they could see the town with the naked eye, but never succeeded in taking it. This photograph, recently taken from a captured German soldier, shows the tower (on the left) of the ruined Cathedral of Soissons, long under fire from German guns. Photo © Underwood & Underwood.