

One of the famous British squadron of dummy wooden battleships which deceived the Germans for some months and finally drew them into an engagement. This boat was supposed to be the battleship "Orion." It was later sunk at Kephola to form a breakwater against the northwesterly gales from the effect of one of which it suffered very badly. British Official © Central News.

New Zealand dressing station just back of the lines. New Zealand Official Photograph © Underwood & Underwood.

A bath parade of British infantry coming back after their bath over a foot bridge built over a flood of water. British Official, Underwood & Underwood.

On the British Western front near Blangy. Floods have made this section an extremely difficult one for the making of trenches and shelters. British Official, Underwood & Underwood.

In this particular section where New Zealand troops were stationed, motor cars as transports had to be abandoned and mules were used to bring supplies to the guns. New Zealand Official Photo, Underwood.