

War boomed the wooden shoe business enormously. In Holland, where leather has become one of the very aloof luxuries, everybody—nearly—has turned to making wooden shoes.

© Mossault.

It's a gay time in Alsace-Lorraine these days. One way of celebrating is to inundate the armored cars of the victors and ride through the streets as escort.

© Press Illustrating Service.

Lieut. Christian Dornhauser, the German aviator who is said to have shot down Quentin Roosevelt.

Central News.

Looking out across the famous Bosphorus from the city of Constantinople. On the right, at anchor, are seen some British cruisers, forming an interesting contrast to the picturesque native vessels.

© Press Illustrating Service.

British cavalry passing through Cologne. In the background looms the splendid cathedral.

© Underwood & Underwood.