

Boys of the 27th Division--General O'Ryan's Smashers of the "Impregnable" Hindenburg Line through the Hindenburg Line all right, but, oh my! with that crowd we Press Illustrating

Left—A moment of deep solemnity in the joyous occasion was the passing of the flower-laden gun caisson, commemorating the heroic dead of the 27th.
International Film Service

Sergeant Reidar Waaler, wearing the British D. C. M. and our own Congressional medal, cuts the silken cord across the Victory Arch at the start of the parade.
Edwin Levick

General O'Ryan at the head of his heroic division riding through the multitudes which surged forward despite the efforts of the police in their eagerness to hail the returning heroes.
Underwood & Underwood

Below—The impressive giant service flag with nearly 2,000 gold stars for the boys of the 27th who sleep in France.
Western Newspaper Union

These wounded soldiers on lower Fifth Avenue waited in comfort to watch their more fortunate comrades pass. From their cheery expressions you would not guess their disappointment at their inability to number among the marchers.
International Film Service