

French Utilizing Captured German Guns and Forts

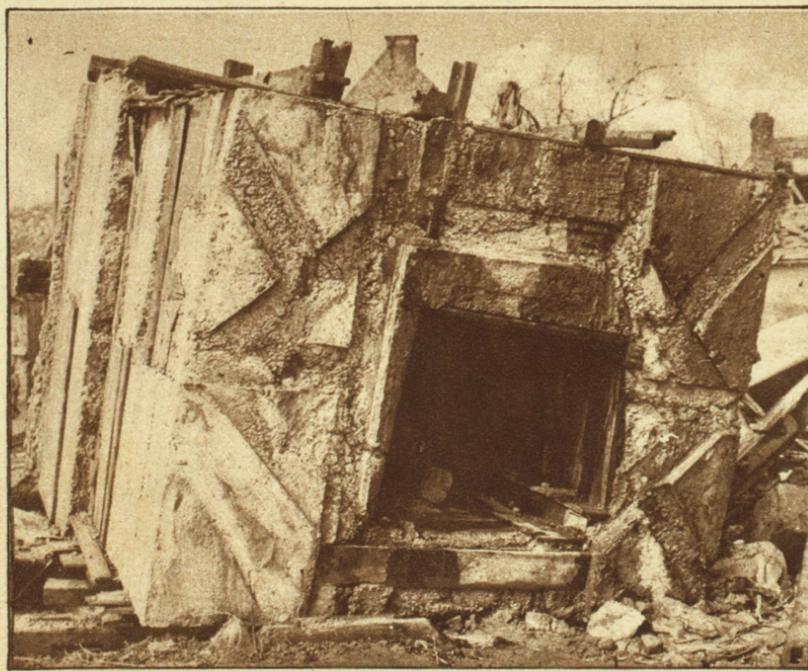

The above picture of a German "pill box," captured by the French and converted to a similar use for themselves, gives some idea of the enormous strength of these miniature forts that are immune to ordinary fire and where a few resolute men can hold up many times their number.

(© French Pictorial Service.)

(At left)—These huts for soldiers, which have been constructed in trenches along a road on the French front, have been nicknamed "confession boxes" by the men. They find them very comfortable, nevertheless, especially in Winter and in the rainy season, and what they lack in size they make up in dryness and warmth.

(© French Pictorial Service.)

A GERMAN FORTRESS, USED BY MACHINE-GUN SQUADS ON THE SOMME, TURNED UPSIDE DOWN BY FRENCH MINES SET UNDER IT.

A 5.9-INCH KRUPP GUN CAPTURED BY THE CANADIANS IN THEIR GREAT DRIVE AGAINST THE HINDENBURG LINE IN THE FALL OF 1918.

(© Canadian Official Photo.)